CONTENTS

The Authors ix
Foreword xi
Preface xvii
Acknowledgments xxv

1. Why Mentoring? 1
   Part One: Three Examples of Good Mentoring 29
   2. The Naturalist 33
   3. The Physician-Scientist 63
   4. The Moralist 91

Part Two: How Good Mentoring Works 119
   5. Values, Practices, and Knowledge Through the Generations 121
   6. How Values, Practices, and Knowledge Are Transmitted 155
   7. Supportive Relationships as the Context for Intergenerational Influence 187

Part Three: Promoting Good Mentoring 219
   8. What Have We Learned? 221
   9. Where Do We Go from Here? 251
For a society to know its history, it must keep what it learned through fallible human memory. Good Men was a mentor, but guiding mentoring that is exceptional is meaningful. It fosters the personal as a whole, a kind of study by enterprise. Good Men cultivation of values, and practice. This book reveals in science and technology.

CONTENTS

Appendix A: Data Collection, Coding, and Analyses 269
Appendix B: Science Apprenticeship Study—G2 and G3 Interview Questions 275
Appendix C: Global Code Sheet 285
References 289
Index 297

Jeanne N. B. is a psychologist and researcher in the sciences. She has a B.A. and directs the history and social science of Transmissions. She has written a book on the good work of science.

David J. is a leader of leadership development. He teaches curriculum theories and teaching methods, andwrite The Individual in the Curriculum. He is a teacher and researcher.